PREFATORY NOTE

In compiling this Catalogue my first intention was merely to select and display in chronological order the materials for Scottish history contained, and not infrequently concealed, in the volumes of Scottish Historical, Antiquarian, Archæological, and kindred Clubs and Societies. It was pointed out to me, however, that their publications lack a complete and detailed Catalogue, and therefore I have expanded my original scheme. The present volume accordingly provides (1) A Catalogue of the publications of Scottish Historical and kindred Clubs and Societies, including the Scottish publications of His Majesty's Stationery Office, from 1780, the date of the foundation of the earliest of them, to the end of the year 1908: (2) A Subject-Index to the materials revealed by the Catalogue as bearing especially, though not exclusively, on Scottish institutions, events, reigns, characters, and historical periods, civil and ecclesiastical.

In the Catalogue I have, where necessary, given explanatory notes on the contents of each volume. The contents of "Miscellanies" and similar volumes are given in full. In the Transactions of Societies articles of historical interest alone are indicated. I have added a minute pagination of each volume and the number of plates it contains. Portraits of historical and public characters are noted both in the Catalogue and Subject-Index; so also are the names of authors and editors.

Apart from the character of their publications, the number of Clubs and Societies which have been formed for the investigation of Scottish history and antiquities is remarkable. In their foundation they fall into three groups, which may be labelled pre-Waverley, Waverley, and post-Waverley. The father of them, the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, was founded in 1780 for "the investigation of the antiquities and history of Scotland", published its first volume in 1792, and still fulfils its original purpose. It was followed after a brief interval by the Royal Society of Edinburgh (1783), whose activities soon became exclusively scientific, and by the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth, founded in 1784 particularly to investigate the history and antiquities of that part of Scotland "of which the City of Perth may still be considered as the capital". The Perth Society continued its operations for over forty years, and published in 1827 a volume of selections from the papers contributed during its existence.

The early years of the nineteenth century witnessed an extraordinary outburst of historical research in Scotland. The Bannatyne Club was founded in 1823 for the "printing and publication of works illustrative of the history, literature, and antiquities of Scotland". It published volumes in lavish profusion until, and indeed after, its formal dissolution in 1861. In 1825 the Northern Institution was established in Inverness to investigate the antiquities of the Highlands and Islands. The Maitland Club, professing wider interests, was founded in 1828, and published 75 volumes in little more than thirty years. In honour of Sir Walter Scott the Abbotsford Club was founded in 1833 with embracing objects, and like the Bannatyne and Maitland Clubs its activities extended beyond the close of the first half of the century. In 1833, also, the Iona Club was instituted in the interests of Highland history, and in 1839 the Spalding Club was established to explore that of the North-Eastern counties. In 1841 the Wodrow Society was founded "for the publication of the works of the fathers and early writers of the Reformed Church of Scotland". The Spottiswoode Society followed in 1843, for "the revival and publication of the acknowledged works" of members of the Episcopal Church.

The year 1870, the date of the dissolution of the Spalding Club, may be regarded as marking the termination of the activity of the Clubs of the Waverley period. Not one of those mentioned above, except the Society of Antiquaries, then survived. Bridging the interval between their extinction and a renewed outburst of energy in the eighties, the year 1856 witnessed the foundation of the Glasgow Archæological Society, whose province was especially restricted to Glasgow and the West of Scotland, a limitation from which the Society freed itself in practice. The Grampian Club followed in 1868, with a wider purview but a shorter life. The Scottish Burgh Records Society and the Club of Deir were also founded in that year. In the North, the Gaelic Society of Inverness was established in 1871, to fulfil the objects of the long defunct Iona Club. In 1877 the Ayrshire and Galloway Archæological Association was launched in the historical interests of its locality, and in the same year the New Club was established with the wider programme of the Waverley Clubs.

In the last twenty years of the nineteenth century many new Clubs were founded. The earliest of them was the Aungervyle Society, established in 1881, which, like the Clarendon Historical Society, founded in 1882, concerned itself with the issue of reprints of historical and literary, but not exclusively of Scottish interest. The Regality Club followed in 1885, mainly "to preserve a record of old Glasgow buildings and of old Glasgow relics". In 1886 the Aberdeen Ecclesiological Society was established for the purpose its name suggests. None of these Clubs, however, met the wider needs of the moment. For, in 1870 the first Report of the Historical Manuscripts Commission had been issued, and it was followed by others which revealed sources for Scottish history so far barely tapped. Sir William Fraser was also at work upon Scottish muniments in the same period. Further, the old Clubs represented an aristocracy of literati, and their volumes, precious in their contents, were equally so in their limited and exclusive circulation. Of the two Clubs which survived in 1886, professing the embracing aims of those of the Waverley period, the Grampian Club probably existed too much for the publication of the researches of a single Editor; while the New Club continued the gorgeous traditions of the Bannatyne, Maitland, and Abbotsford era. There was a call, clearly, for a new Society with a general outlook upon Scottish history and a particular interest in unpublished historical materials. Opportunely, therefore, the Scottish History Society was founded in 1886, and in the same year the Spalding Club was revived as the New Spalding Club, with the objects of its predecessor.

The activity of the Scottish History Society encouraged other Societies to work in more restricted fields. In 1887 the Gaelic Society of Glasgow was founded, the Scottish Clergy Society in 1888, the Edinburgh Bibliographical Society in 1890, the Glasgow Ecclesiological Society in 1893, the Scottish Record Society in 1898, the Scottish Ecclesiological Society (into which the Glasgow and Aberdeen Societies were merged) in 1903, the St. Andrew Society in 1906, and the Old Edinburgh Club in 1908.

Equally significant of awakened interest in historical investigation was the general institution of Scottish Field Clubs in the nineteenth century. The publications of the following are catalogued in this volume:—the Banffshire Field Club (1880), the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club (1831), the Buchan Field Club (1887), the Dumfriesshire and Galloway Natural History and Antiquarian Society (1862), the Literary and Scientific Association of Elgin (1836), the Hawick Archæological Society (1856), the Huntly Field Club (1883), the Inverness Scientific Society and Field Club (1875), the Northern

Association of Literary and Scientific Societies (1887), and the Stirling Natural History and Archæological Society (1878).

I have also included two Philosophical Societies whose publications contain historical materials:—the Aberdeen Philosophical Society (1840), and the Royal Philosophical Society of Glasgow (1802). Lest I should seem to have overlooked them, I mention here the Ross-shire Philosophical Society, which is extinct and did not publish; and the Greenock Philosophical Society, whose only publications, the Watt Anniversary Lectures, are not relative to the subject of history. The Edinburgh Philosophical Institution and the Paisley Philosophical Institution are in the same category.

Included in this Catalogue are the following Orcadian Societies:—the Antiquarian and Natural History Society of Orkney (1844), the Orkney and Zetland Antiquarian and Statistical Society (1831), and the Viking Club (1892). For the sake of completeness I also mention the following:—the Orkney Literary and Scientific Club, which issued Reports for 1842 and 1843; the Orkney Natural History Society (1837), which issued its first Report in 1839, a second in 1840, and published in 1905 a volume entitled "Orcadian Papers"; the Kirkwall Literary and Scientific Association (1855), which published its Regulations in 1855; the Kirkwall Young Men's Literary Association (1860), whose Rules and Regulations were published in 1869; and the Literary and Scientific Society of Shetland (1861), which published Rules and Regulations in 1882. Sutherland is represented in the Catalogue by the Sutherland Association (1866).

The Literary Clubs included in the Catalogue are:—the Hunterian Club (1871), the Scotish Literary Club (1877), the Scottish Text Society (1882), and the Rymour Club (1903).

I gratefully acknowledge a grant towards the cost of publication from the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland. To my friend Mr. P. J. Anderson, of this University, I owe unstinted thanks for unwearying help and advice. If such a volume is fitting for dedication, I beg him to accept it from me.

PUBLICATIONS OF HIS MAJESTY'S STATIONERY OFFICE.[1]

In 1800, following the Report of a Parliamentary Committee on July 4th of that year, a Record Commission of Great Britain was constituted. In 1825 a further Commission was set up for the printing and publication of the documents in the State Paper Office (see F. V. below). In 1838, by the Public Record Act of 1 and 2 Victoria, cap. 94, secs. 1 and 20, the custody of specified English archives was entrusted to the Master of the Rolls. They were drawn together in the Public Record Office, with which, in 1855, the State Paper Office was incorporated. The publication of the Calendars of State Papers and of the Chronicles and Memorials of Great Britain thereafter proceeded (see F. I., F. IV.). By ancient usage and specific enactments (see especially the Act of August 12th, 1662), the custody of Scottish State documents is vested in the Lord Clerk-Register. Under his direction, or that of the Deputy Clerk-Register, the Scottish records in F. VI. have been published by H.M. Treasury.

[1] The Publications are enumerated in an official Catalogue published in Scotland by Messrs. Oliver and Boyd. From it the volumes relative to Scotland have been extracted, and they bear the numerals which indicate them in sections F. I., F. IV., F. VI., and F. VII. of the official Catalogue. In F. V., however, the official Catalogue is incomplete, in that it omits publications that are out of print. For that section, therefore, a Report printed by order of the House of Commons on December 2nd, 1867, has here been used. From it Scottish issues of the Record Commissions have been extracted, the numerical index of each work in the Report being determined by the date of the issue of its first volume.
